Project architect and detail design co-ordination for the construction stage of the rebuilding of a large, 16th century Grade II listed thatched and cob farmhouse following a substantial fire which destroyed the entire interior and roof structure of the building, but left part of the cob walls intact.

It involved working with the client's interior designer and construction team as well as loss adjusters to agree the appropriate quality of rebuild and the client's aspirations on finishes.

Started 2008 and completed during Autumn 2010.
